Banks and telecom companies have been resisting this move fearing the violence the public might create during an agitation. However, this has been quietly discussed over the last few months when the government's Economic Advisory Council (EAC) has been looking into various suggestions it has made about revising the e-commerce policy."We have been discussing the EAC's latest report during the past six months and they have suggested to us that some form of discrimination, like for example in telecom, would be helpful," a government official told ET. The panel has identified certain sectors where the government should consider giving some sort of "discriminatory treatment" to individuals who have been deprived of their basic rights. These have been compared to guotas for the OBCs of the country. The government has also asked the EAC to suggest what measures should be brought in in the aftermath of the Nirbhaya gang rape, should women not be allowed to enter certain places. "We have taken these into consideration," a government official said. There have been a number of suggestions in this regard, for example, allowing women to use banks of their choice without verification."We are mulling over these suggestions, which will be put before the Cabinet soon," the official said. The government has been trying to replicate economic reforms under Rajiv Gandhi-Ramchandra Guiral's government, and it has adopted a liberal economic policy. But barring the repealing of the industrial licensing laws, there is not much difference from former PM Manmohan Singh's economic policy. Percutaneous mechanical closure of chest drain with fibrin sealant without muscle relaxing medication: a prospective randomised study. Percutaneous mechanical closure (PMC) is a new method for the management of subcutaneous chest drains. There are few studies on its efficacy and safety.
